These two videos are great. The first is by Takashi Amano, the Guru behind the Nature Aquarium.I am really inspired by his great works of art, and try to bring as much of his insights and teachings into my aquascaping... I have to admit that dragging around big pieces of wood, meter long roots, and 80 pound pieces of stone feels different than his elegant aquascaping.

In technology-driven societies, scientists, and educators alike flounder in making science interesting and applicable. Communicating science, defined as communicating scientific facts as well as teaching and using the scientific process, can also be done informally though leisure activities. In this qualitative study, I examined the leisure activity of aquarium keeping and its ability to ...

I finally bought a copy of "Nature Aquarium World" by Amano. It is a beautiful book, but I don't understand some of the data he gives for his tanks. I normally calculate CO2 levels (mg/l) from pH and kH measurements, using a table that George Booth incorporated into an article he wrote based on the Dupla 10 Golden Rules.
